Brand New Book. Excerpt from Education: A Discourse, Preached by Rev. J. H. Linebaugh, Rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. James, Baton Rouge, La, on the 20th October, A. D., 1850 We think it an error to view man simply as a finite being. That man has been thus viewed, we think a popular and prevailing fallacy - a fallacy which has injured, if not corrupted the speculations of philosophy, which has controlled, if not perverted the efforts of philanthropy, and given a false character to our systems of education. That man, materially, is finite, cannot be questioned. There is a limit to his physical powers. There is a limit to his sight, to his hearing, indeed, to his being, so far as it is connected with sensible objects; but to his intellect and soul there is no limit these are the tokens of man's resemblance to God - these are the special evidences of that likeness to himself wherewith God has impressed him - these are the noble insignia and prerogatives of that sublime image of Himself, which God has stamped upon him; and unless you will call God finite - unless you will set bounds to His eternal wisdom, goodness and power - unless you will say to His eternal attributes, in the pride of an impious superciliousness - thus far shall you come and no farther, presume not to say of these that they are finite. When the universe becomes finite, when immortality becomes finite, then say of man that he is simply a finite being. Who that has marked the sublime dis...
