Excerpt: .then burst into tears, Don t you guess it all, she sobbed. Yes, she is my mother, my own mother, and I did not even know we were at her very door. Oh Miss Williamson, she must relent, she must take me to her heart once more. If it were not for my brother she would have done so long, long ago. When I go there they will not admit me. When I write they send me back my letters. This time, when we came to England I could make no more advances. I had been too bitterly wounded.-It is difficult to understand how some people can have the courage to be unforgiving, day after day, week after week. They go to sleep, they wake up again; they hear the birds sing; they see the sun shine upon the just and the unjust; a...
