CHAPTER IV THE TREATMENT AND PREVENTION OF PREMATURE SENILITY Forty or more years ago surgery, under the influence of Listerism, started a new life, and the world stood astounded at the brilliancy of its achievements. During this time the science of medicine seemed to stand still, but there was much silent good work going on all the time, and for the last twenty years there has been such growth and development as no former period of the worlds history has ever seen. Bacteriology, organic chemistry, and the organic remedies chiefly derived from the ductless glands, have revolutionized our methods, and have enormously increased our powers over disease, and perhaps more especially over the diseased conditions peculiar to the elderly and the old. I think the future of therapeutics lies chiefly in the direction of organic remedies, in the medicines which are more or less native to the human body and not foreign to it. I should be the last to dis 77 parage the value of drugs obtained from plants, such as strychnine, digitalis, aloes, etc. , but they are foreigners, and will be gradually superseded, I believe, by those remedies which are more nearly related to the animal organism. Iron, phosphorus, and perhaps arsenic, stand midway; the first two are natural constituents of the body, and should be looked upon as special foods and not as drugs. I make an earnest appeal to my medical brethren to study closely modern physiological therapeutics, and...
