Its contents extend over a period of more than one hundred and seventy years, and embrace concise accounts of the godly lives and peaceful deaths of above six hundred persons. Among these is to be found a great variety in age, condition in life, station in the Church, and growth in religious knowledge and experience; but they all agree in a concurrent testimony to the blessed effects of a religious life, and to the consolation and support it furnishes on a dying bed. They form but a small portion of the cloud of witnesses who have lived and died in the Christian principles and practices of the religious Society of Friends, and who have proved by happy experience their value and excellence, both as a rule for the government of conduct through life, and as a foundation on which they could safely rest their hopes for eternity, in the hours of sickness and of death.
