Revolver Publishing Jan 2014, 2014. Taschenbuch. Book Condition: Neu. 269x169x15 mm. Neuware - The project Ice Houses and Sky Holes - Interventions, Explorations, Reconstructions and Mapping in Schleswig-Holstein 2012-13 takes the ice houses in Schleswig-Holstein, largely forgotten cultural monuments, as a base for artistic investigation and research. Within this context and in a timespan of two years between 2012 and 2013, Till Krause, Ulrike Moor, Dan Peterman, and Hans Hs Winkler developed conceptual artworks and realized them in remote locations, in damp earth cellars and on ice house mounds. Devised with the artists, this publication shows that the concern is not so much a presentation of artworks in exotic places, but more a contribution to the current circumstances of art and society, past and present, principles of communication and climate change. Within this framework, the artists speak a low-key and precise pictorial language. Dan Peterman shows bizarre human demeanor with a lonely ice swimmer in the endless expanse of frozen Lake Michigan. Till Krause introduces new cartographical perspectives to the ground map of Germany by setting ice paths and ice houses in relation to natural geological formations. Ulrike Mohr calls to memory a chapter from the history of natural science and Hans Hs Winkler builds a bridge between a public ice house and alternative strategies of distribution. The realization of these ice projects in historical ice houses is an attempt to access the gaps bordering on landscape, architecture, and art. As a forgotten edifice and monument of a lost sophisticated building culture, the ice house becomes a place for reflection. Far from city-event-culture, in the countryside or in the shelter of the manor estates of rural Schleswig-Holstein, the viewer is exposed to unfamiliar conditions of perception. Already the location makes the theme of climate change omnipresent; the ice house is...
