But a large portion of the maritime region, in the Southeast, Southwest and West, belonged to the old inclosed country where the methods of settlement and cultivation differed radically from those of the open-field country, and where the history of agricultural change does not, therefore, belong to the history of the inclosure movement. From this distinction between the maritime and the Midland counties, with a continuity of development peculiar to each, it follows that a differentiation often made between the inclosures of the sixteenth and those of the eighteenth century, --the earlier for sheep-farming, the later for an improved arable cultivation, --must be accepted only with reservations. The eighteenth century, it is true, witnessed a great extension of arable farming on that form of inclosure which subjugated the waste lands. But at the same time the inclosure of the open fields was proceeding...
