Wheeler, U. S. Corps of Engineers: December 23, 1874, Before the American Geographical Society At this time the expedition headed by Lewis and Clarke was organized: , the former a nephew of, and military Secretary to, the President; the latter, an officer in the army. The inception of this work has not merely signalized the wonderful intuitive power that has been accredited to Jefferson, but shows at this early day the value attached to systematic Governmental support. With all the facilities at this time available, this, one of the most prominent expeditions of the first quarter of the 19th century, started out to pierce the northwestern interior. This was the first well authenticated and well equipped expedition that had for its mission an inquiry into the extent and resources, then comparatively unknown, of this great and almost continental area. It is true that at an earlier period, in our southwestern territory, the trips of the early Jesuit missionaries following the expedition for the conquest under Cortes, and later parties, sent...
