The Cossacks of the Volga were at that time an unruly set of people and under the leadership of two hetmans, Jermak Timofjejeff and Ivan Kolzo, and three other leaders, did much injury to the Asiatic caravan trade and consequently to Russian commerce, besides being the terror of their own neighbors--the nomadic peoples of the steppes. The Strogonoffs being as clear headed as they were wealthy, then offered these highway robber Cossacks honorable service with them in carrying out their own plans. They wrote friendly letters to them; urged upon them that they, as they were the children of the White Czar, should carry on a nobler work than that which they were in the habit of doing, and concluded by asking them as Christians to help them protect the land from the infidels and unbelievers. Jermak and...
