It was plainly seen, however, that violence and severity could not alone succeed, and that, at least north of the Alps, Catholicism was threatened with ruin, unless the intense desire of Christian nations for a genuine reform of the clergy, of church organization, and of doctrine, was met by the convocation of a general council. He was a doctor of canon law, a well-meaning, amiable man, who wished to live at peace with every one. Pius IV. (that was the name he took) was personally disposed to summon a council; but the majority of the college of cardinals was opposed to it, and the Catholic Ecclesiastical orators.
