Excerpt: . . . easy to determine if a plant is wind pollinated (entomophilous). Such plants have small inconspicuous flowers. They produce large quantities of dry powdery pollen, and have large hairy stigmas. Many flowers which are wind pollinated come out before the leaves, so that the pollen grains have free access to the stigmas, e. g. Hazel, Oak; others, e. g. Mealie, have the inflorescence well above the vegetative shoot. Wind-pollinated flowers found in South Africa are Oak, Hazel, Castor Oil, Mealie, and numerous grasses. 76.
