Kennard: On Behalf of the Subscribing Citizens, on Presentation to the Town of a Memorial Portrait of the Late Brig.-Gen l Edward Augustus Wild The Great Civil War of 1861-5 in the United States will ever hold a conspicuous place in the world s history, for its magnitude, and as one inevitable in the moral advancement and civil progress of its time. This inadequate portrayal of the remarkable career and character of Edward Augustus Wild, a cherished son of Brookline, as set forth in the following pages, with the presentation to the town of his memorial portrait, May 24th, 1893, was not prompted by a too zealous partisanship or from the partiality of social relations, but because of his unalloyed patriotism and his signal service in that contention, in the cause of the Union, and when under its strain the administration of Abraham Lincoln called for the aid of loyal men. The initial steps for this presentation were informally taken by the following well-known citizens, General Wild s contemporaries, familiar with...
