Excerpt: .spinning a silken;path for themselves as they go. When caterpillars are bred in the study it must;not be forgotten that the air inside a house is much drier than it is out of doors amongst the trees and low herbage, where caterpillars live naturally. The amateur will require: some experience in keeping the air at a right degree of moisture, when breeding upon growing plants. In close tin boxes or jars, where the leaves must be changed every day, there is not so much trouble. An important thing to remember with larvae in jars, is to thoroughly wash out the jars with cold water every day. If, however, a caterpillar has spun a web on the side and is hung up to moult, it must not be disturbed. In changing the food it is better not to remove the caterpillars from the old food, but having placed the new supply in the jar, cut off the piece of leaf upon which they are and drop it into the jar. If they are not near a moult, a little puff of breath will generally dis lodge them. Some caterpillars, as Papilio Turnus, which spins a platform to which it retires after feeding, can best be fed upon a living tree out of doors, but must be covered with a gauze bag to keep off enemies. A piece of paper should be kept attached to each breeding jar or cage, upon which regular notes must be...
