Excerpt from The Life of Count Rumford: A Lecture Given in the Lyceum Course of 1872-3, at Woburn, Mass., January 21st, 1873 Deeply hurt at this rebuff, Thompson returned to Woburn where another attempt was made to arrest him, which was ingeniously foiled however by Mr. Baldwin, who seeing the company halt before the dwelling of Thompson s mother, just opposite his own residence, suspected their object and enticed them to his barn, where be supplied them with liquor until they forgot their errand and departed, leaving Thomp son unmolested. It is not surprising that in deep bitterness of spirit, Thompson now wrote to his father-in-law My enemies are indefatigable in their endeavors to distress me, and I find to my sorrow, that they are but too successful. I have been driven from the camp by the clamors of the New Hampshire people, and am again threatened in this place. But I hope soon to be out of the reach of my cruel persecutors, for I am determined to seek for that peace and protection in for eign lands, and among strangers, which...
