Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Pioneer History of Clarksfield To learn the whole history of the settlement of Clarksfield we must go back to the history of the Western Reserve and the Firelands, and the narrative properly begins more than two centuries ago. Bosworth says, in Gleanings From the Western Reserve: The Western Reserve is the mother of us all. Go where we will over the interior, if we do not find Western Reserve men among the molding agencies, we are almost sure to find an institution, a church, a school, or a pervading sentiment or principle, that can be traced back to the intensely active moral forces that have swayed society in northeastern Ohio from the first. Her influence more or less direct, even upon the whole nation and the world, has been incalculable, and in the aggregate it has always told for righteousness. Blot out Hudson and Oberlin, the seminaries and academies of all this region, eliminate from history her noted names, sweep away the host of unnumbered workers in the home land and the foreign field, in private life and public, in all departments of religion, science and reform, who have been born or trained or have labored here. Think for a moment, if you can, what that would mean, and it will not seem an unfitting thing for us to come and sit down by our mother and ask her to tell us again the stories of her youth. When New Connecticut was thrown open for settlement, it was most naturally from old Connecticut and the other New England states that the pioneers came - people Who brought with them their church and school, many of...
