Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Staff Sergeant Steven Jackson was a Reserve Component soldier who reenlisted on his fiftieth birthday in 2003 after a sixteen-year break in service. After a valuable predeployment train-up at Camp McCoy, Wisconsin, he mobilized at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, with the 418th Civil Affairs Battalion. At Fort Bragg the unit received more training then deployed to Iraq for duty with the 1st Cavalry Division on 24 September 2004. Serving with the government support team (GST) of the division, Jackson commented on the time lag between training emphasis in the United States and tactical requirements in theater. He would later serve with the 3rd Infantry Division and the US Agency for International Development (USAID), departing from Iraq on or about 29 June 2005. Jackson served in Iraq at the same time as his son and daughter. Baghdad Province was Jackson s primary area of operations with the GST, aiding Iraqi farmers on agricultural issues like irrigation. He felt that US Army National Guard soldiers he sometimes encountered had a better feel for such non-kinetic reconstruction duties than their Regular Army counterparts. Active Component battalions and brigades seemed reluctant to share information and knowledge about the execution and effectiveness of reconstruction and development projects in their areas of operation. This lack of a knowledge system complicated relief operations, which was also hampered by Iraqi corruption as well as communications and logistical challenges. Jackson expressed his concern that careerism - especially among Reserve officers - affected mission accomplishment as well as morale, as senior officers seemed reluctant to sanction poor performance with efficiency reports. Poor performers affected Active Component/Reserve Component relations. As such, officers found themselves unwanted and at times their...
