Excerpt from Romanism, Protestantism, Anglicanism, Being a Layman s View of Some Questions of the Day, Together With Remarks on With Remarks Plain Reasons Against Joining the Church of Rome Church If I venture to dissent from this Opinion it is certainly not because I under-estimate the importance of the issue which is at stake in the conflict between these two principles, nor yet because I have not studied the question, but rather because, having done so, I have failed to see that the case for Atheism is stronger than that for Theism, even upon purely intellectual grounds, while at the same time it is manifestly not upon intellectual grounds alone, or even chiefly, that the question, for the mass of man kind, will have to be decided.
