Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Early History and Growth of Calcutta The (lav when Job Charnock, sitting under the shade of a big peepul tree at a place now known as Baitackkhana Bazar, smoked meditativelv his favourite hooks): and selected Calcutta as a most convenient site for the trading purposes of the English merchants, whose agent he then was, little did he calculate that he was practically laying the foundation of a great Empire for his countrymen. Their sole object then was to shake the golden pagoda tree, which, according to a i vestern superstition, was supposed to grow and flourish in Indian soil. Little (lid Job Charnock anticipate the consequences of his decision. It is a hazardous task to calculate the destinies of nations. Behind the veil of futurity many forces are at work, which even a deep and penetrative mind is unable to fathom. In preper season they become manifest, when, so to speak, they attain their full maturity and development. I vhen Job Charnock made his choice, it was remote even from the dreams of the most farsighted man that Calcutta would become the capital of the British Indian Empire.
