On the day after my 13th birthday, my mother died. The day my mother died everything changed. And I mean everything. Within the space of four weeks, the home we lived in was packed up and sold, and after flying 2,000 kilometres south from the wide, open countryside to the complexities of city suburbia, my little sister and I were sent to live with different parts of the family. Oh, and I started high school. All in all, it was an abrupt, tearing, tearful parting. It felt like a door slammed on that chapter of my life Hermetically sealed, never fully integrated into the following chapters. I pined for the lands of my childhood for years, but I never went back. It was on my to-do list all right, but what scars would going back re-open Would stifled grief, all black and ugly, come pouring out Would going back liberate my ghosts, or unveil new ones I wanted the answers to these questions But, honestly, I was scared Then, when I was 26, my estranged father died unexpectedly. Death...
