Excerpt from Philadelphia Medical Times, Vol. 8: A Bi-Weekly Journal of Medical and Surgical Science; August 3, 1878 He was a man in middle life, who had had syphilis, and who was probably a hard drinker. He stated that he had been in good health up to three days before his admission, when he was taken with violent vomiting, and from that time suffered from severe and constant pain in the back and head. His urine also became scanty, and the last that he had passed (and then but a small quantity) was twenty-six hours before coming into the hospital. He was found to be weak and anaemic, with a pulse of 120, and his abdomen was swollen and tense, but not very tender on palpation. A catheter was passed, but no urine came away. Wet cups were applied over the kidneys, and jaborandi and croton oil, followed by digitalis, were given internally; these measures, of course, being resorted to with a view of producing a vicarious elimination of urea from the system. In addition, he was given whisky and aromatic spirits of ammonia. He perspired freely, and in about an hour passed a large quantity of urine. Later the cupping was repeated, with the effect of entirely relieving the pain in the back. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
