

A Dark Dreambox of Another Kind: The Poems of Alfred Starr Hamilton (Paperback)

By Alfred Starr Hamilton

Song Cave, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Poetry. Edited by Ben Estes and Alan Felsenthal. Introduction by Geof Hewitt. Though Hamilton wrote thousands of poems during his lifetime, only a small percentage of them ever found their way into print. His poems appeared in small poetry journals during the 60s, 70s and 80s; two chapbooks, The Big Parade and Sphinx; and one full-length collection, The Poems of Alfred Starr Hamilton, published by The Jargon Society in 1970. In this new volume, Ben Estes and Alan Felsenthal present a collection of Hamilton's poems from these publications, along with many of Hamilton's poems that were previously considered lost and poems from posthumously found notebooks. Hamilton is the author of spare, wry, slightly surreal poems that have, so far as I can see, no real equivalent in American English. Ron Silliman Alfred Starr Hamilton wrote to the governor of poetry / And simply signed [his] own name. Consider this collection assembled by two very dedicated allographers an essential expansion on said letter. People who've encountered Hamilton's work previously will be glad for the chance to see familiar poems alongside many marvelous new ones. And...
