Excerpt from The Commemoration of Florence Nightingale: An Oration Delivered by Sir George Newman, K. C. B., M.D., F. R. C. P., Before the General Meeting of the International Council of Nurses, London, July 1937 In the presence of an international assembly of nurses for the healing of the nations, one can hardly escape the refection, what an inestimable gain for the whole world it would be if, as well as neutralising the wounded men and women of our generation, each nation would learn the wisdom of neutralising its traditional lack of appreciation of other nations, the mutual undervaluations and particular shortcomings, and the ignorance and prejudices which so easily beset us all. For, to know and to understand is always to make juster judgments of men. Our true valuation of Florence Nightingale would find most appropriate expression, yes, and would choose the better part; first, in gratefully accepting with knowledge and with understanding, the inspiration of her life and work and its spiritual foundation; and secondly, in planning our own days enterprise in order that...
