Excerpt: . could only carry it on for a much shorter period than usual, the cerebral symptoms becoming too oppressive. He always slept rather heavily. The emissions were variable in character, and were usually accompanied by imperfect erections, but with the sensation volupteuse: usually he awoke immediately after and not during the emissions. Upon several occasions emissions seem to have occurred upon the second night (the morrow-night) after a day of much exertion and excitement. His health was very delicate; was sometimes confined to the house a long while from severe colds and other causes, under which circumstances the spermatic discharges disappeared for as long periods as four to six weeks. Emissions usually happened every 7 to 14 days, and were more frequent during the winter months; this was partly owing to the effect of heat, the patient lying under heavy clothing. Jan. 4 (twice)...
