Passion in Corporate Cultures? the Role of Passion in the Organisational Culture of a Dutch and a German Business

By Romy Steinhäuser

Grin Verlag. Paperback. Condition: New. 156 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.8in. x 0.4in. Masters Thesis from the year 2006 in the subject Business economics - Personnel and Organisation, grade: 9, University of Twente, course: Educational Science and Technology Human Resource Development, language: English, abstract: The concept of passion is not particularly well researched but has become a hot topic in the academic world in recent years. For, passion offers insight into how people relate to various aspects of their work. The present study aimed to gain a more research-based understanding of the underpinning elements of the concept of passion. By connecting it with theory on corporate cultures it could be investigated how the concept translates in organisational settings as well as which factors actively contribute to its existence and which may hinder it. Also, a new framework was developed, which was based on the notion that human beings are four-dimensional. It argued corporate cultures could be seen as four-dimensional. To test and explore the questions and findings raised in the literature review, a case study research design was chosen. It employed multiple, exploratory research methods such as a so-called preparatory booklet, interviewing, and observations. Overall, two organisations agreed to participate...
