Excerpt from Some Considerations Affecting the Primary Education of Crippled Children Together With a Survey of the Historical Development and Present Status of Care for Cripples, 1910 In addition to proper surgical attention, what the crippled child most needs is that help which is required to offset or counterbalance the peculiar limitations imposed upon him by his deformity. The physical care is of prime importance, for it is essential in all cases and in many instances it succeeds in effecting complete cures, thus disposing of the entire problem. But there is something besides physical care to be considered if the best all-around results are to be obtained. The crippled child should be afforded educational facilities fully as advantageous as those offered to normal children. All of the arguments which can be advanced for the education of normal children - and more - can be urged in behalf of the crippled child.
