CHAPTER XV INCIDENTS AND REMEDIES In pig-sticking, as in hunting, a certain amount of grief is to be expected. I know of nothing so amusing as a real crumpling fall to another, nor of anything so good for a man's own nerve as a similar fall to himself without damage--a regular galloping fall for choice, horse and man, six legs in the air, and then a puff of dust rising from where they have hit the ground as if a shell had burst. It is the slow falls that cause the grief, not the galloping ones. If a man is to keep young and active he must fall. And I suggest, with all due deference to the authorities, that there should be an entry in each senior officer's report as to how many falls he has taken in the past twelve...
