VDM Verlag Dr. Mueller e.K. Paperback. Condition: New. 112 pages. Dimensions: 9.6in. x 6.7in. x 0.2in. Laser-produced plasmas play an important role in plasma physics and fusion research. Parametric instabilities are the most important processes governing the laser-plasma interaction. Some parametric instabilities as two-plasmon decay or stimulated Raman scattering were investigated in this work using an optical signal, the so called 32 harmonics. As this harmonic originates from the plasma its characteristics provide important information about the plasma properties. The angular, spectral and temporal structure of this 32 harmonics were studied. Detailed theoretical analysis was made based on a new model to explain the measured results and to gain information about the generation process and the plasma. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from Roseburg,OR, La Vergne,TN. Paperback.
