A low headstone to a sunken grave in the old Presbyterian Churchyard, just back of the grim Nixon inclosure of tragic memories, bears the following quaint inscription, rudely cut: Here Lies The Body of Agnes of Glasgow, who departed this life Feb. 12, 1780. Aged 20. It is a desolate spot, overgrown with tall grasses and matted myrtle, and almost hidden from view by overhanging vines and drooping boughs of cedar. A fitting sepulcher, you will say, for a broken heart! Aye so, for thus the pretty old legend has it; and many a pilgrim finds his way to the ancient tomb, with its queer epitaph, and pauses there in a sort of fascination born of mystery. Agnes, a winsome Scotch lassie, had given her heart to a brave young soldier who had embarked with the British army...
