Helion Company, United Kingdom, 2011. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. An incisive look at French influence in Central Africa. Lt-Col Robert Brown, Soldier of Fortune magazine France in Centrafrique explores the pre- and post-colonial history of the Republic of Central Africa as well as giving the reader a taste of the country s involvement in World War II itself. The main focus of this volume is on Central Africa s independence and the rise to power of Jean Bedel Bokassa including the Focard network and Francafrigue connections, France s military links with RCA (defense agreements), the republic s post independence military, its politics and Bokassa s coup. It takes a staggering look at Central Africa under Bokassa s leadership and the ensuing break down in its relationship with France. Operation Baracuda was the natural culmination of that soured relationship and in this book Erwan de Cherisey examines France s last colonial expedition , the planning of the operation, its players, a step-by-step breakdown and its outcome. To bring the reader up to speed with the RCA de Cherisey discusses the years after Bokassa, a new political rule, the effects on the army and the relationship with France all the way to Operation Almandin I, II and III. France s involvement in the RCA is deep-seated and ongoing. This book concludes with a look at Operation Boali, Bozize s coup and the international fall-out in terms of further intervention both from France and the EUFOR.
