Excerpt from The History of England, Vol. 7 of 8: From the Invasion of Julius Caesar to the Revolution in 1688 AT the commencement of the civil war, all CHAP Englilhmen, who ferved abroad, were invited over, !! And treated with extraordinary refpeft: And molt 1544 of them, being defcended of good families, and, by reafon of their abfence, unacquainted with the new principles which deprefi ed the dignity of the crown, had inlied under the royal fiandard. Bur it is oh fervable that, though the military profe?ion re quires great genius, and long experience, in the principal commanders, all its fubordinate duties may be difcharged by ordinary talents, and from fuperficial practice. Citizens and country-gentle men foon became excellent officers; and the generals of greatefi fame and capacity happened, all of them, to fpring Up on the fide of the parliament. The courtiers and great nobility, in the other party, checked the growth of any extraordinary genius among the fubordinate officers; and every man there, as in a regular efiablifhed government, was confined to the ilarion in which his...
