Excerpt from On the Rise of Land in Scandinavia That large tracts of Scandinavia Sweden and Norway have since the so-called Glacial Period risen so as to make the sea apparently sink, in some places as much as 600 feet, is an opinion in which geologists at present concur. The facts upon which this opinion is founded are, briefly stated, the following: ancient coast-lines in various heights above the present level of the sea, cut partly into solid rock, partly into loose ground, terraces or detritus banks with even and horizontal or nearly horizontal surfaces, succeeding one another like stairs, from the rivers mouths into the sea up along their nether course, marine shells occurring on various levels above the modern coast-line, and marks, cut some time ago into solid rocks along the northern part of the coast of Sweden on a level with the Baltic, now lying in various, not very great, heights above the latter.
