Dr. Josie Tate, newly divorced, needs to escape the personal and professional pressures of Colorado s Front Range. Seeking a more tranquil environment to heal and to practice her skills, the rookie veterinarian moves to the rural mountain town of Pagosa Springs. Pagosa Springs offers Josie everything she wants: the mentorship of a more experienced vet, natural beauty, and a chance to spend time with her much-loved dog and horses. She s thrilled to discover the varied nature of veterinary work in the mountains, from delivering foals to removing porcupine quills from the faces of overly inquisitive dogs. A call from a sheriff s deputy sends Josie out to a ranch, where she finds an injured, neglected horse. Initially outraged at the animal s condition, Josie relaxes when the horse s owner, Joe Brinkman, explains the circumstances behind the animal s condition. After initial conflict, Josie forms a friendship with Joe, a widowed professor from Denver with a young daughter. The two explore and camp the high mountain trails surrounding Pagosa Springs. With her bruised psyche healing and her veterinary career on track, Josie may be ready for a new romance. But when Joe makes an unexpected announcement, Josie must make a life-defining choice.
