C, Vol. 2 of 2 Such was the terrible letteri such the very words of a part which fell upon me, with a power which no language can describe. And yet, I do be iieve I showed no emotion before the girl who brought me the message of death - I mean what I say - the message of death I believe too that I spoke in my usual voice, and I know that I did not shed a tear, and that I have not shed a tear since - I hope never to shed one while I breathe, for the perfidy of that wo man. It was not - oh no l - it was not the losing a marriage with her, it was not even the losing of her heart, for I could have borne both, I believe, with a smile, if she had treated me as I deserve to be treat ed by those I love - no - no - it was neither - it was the losing of my faith in her that...
