Forgotten Books, United States, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from George Brown: The Globe Confederation Across the Atlantic fifty years is a brief period in the life of a nation, in the New World it is long enough to see the birth of great provinces and the development of populous cities. Between 1867 and 1917 Canada has materially made great progress, politically its position is worse, for it still drags the clerical chain to snap which was the motive of the constitutional change 50 years ago; The English tourist who views our cities from an auto and speeds from ocean to ocean in a Pullman, is astonished by what he sees and gushes over the prosperity of the Dominion. If the visitor is in English public life, with the perplexing problem of Ireland in mind, he jumps to the conclusion that the flourishing condition which astonishes him, is the result of Canada's having adopted the federal system of government, and on returning home he will declare, with the assured confidence of one who has been an eyewitness, that the Imperial parliament must take a leaf from Canada's experience. This illustrates the danger of generalizing from imperfect data. Had the visitor compared the rural sections of Quebec with those of Ontario, had he even traversed a concession of farmers who are Catholic and turned into another of Protestant farmers, he would have seen that a change in constitution had not helped the one or affected the other. That Canada's progress is due to the industry, thrift, and enterprise of the majority (of its inhabitants, and to the unfolding of great natural resources, the visitor no more perceives than do...
