

Educating Black Males: Critical Lessons in Schooling, Community, and Power

By Ronnie Hopkins

State University of New York Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 164 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 5.9in. x 0.5in. Offers insights into the creation of more effective and empowering schools and classrooms for Black males. Educating Black Males: Critical Lessons in Schooling, Community, and Power offers insights into how we can create more effective and empowering schools and classrooms for Black males. In addition, it examines the larger social reality of American African males and analyzes theoretical contexts of educational theory and practice in alternative education programs and crisis intervention strategies for Black males. It promotes strategies for enhancement of self-esteem and motivation for learning in Black males, thereby analyzing power relations in the classrooms, schools, and community. It is designed as a resource for those concerned with helping American African males to break free from and defy negative stereotypes and fatalistic imaging. It did not take Hopkins project to convince me that the state of Black males is in crisis, but I had heretofore seen the proposal for all male academies as alternative education. Thanks to this book I now perceive the work this project describes as crisis intervention designed to promote self-esteem and motivation to learn. The author is thorough in...
