Excerpt from How to Conduct a Receivership: One of a Series of Lectures Especially Prepared for the Blackstone Institute Receiverships have long been common, and, in the case of commercial embarrassments, the tendency seems to be more and more to resort to them. A receiver is a disinterested person appointed by the court to hold and manage the property in liquidation. While there are many occasions for the appointment of receivers, as in the case of partnerships, railroads, banks, etc., yet, for the purposes of illustration, the treatment of receivers of business or industrial corporations alone is deemed advisable in this article. Cause For Appointment of Receiver It is apparent that the general cause for resort to a receivership is the unsound condition of a corporation or, in other words, its inability to meet its obligations. The corporation, if all the creditors concurred, might make a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, without the intervention of a court, and this is sometimes done.
