Not illustrated. 1856 Excerpt: .Bedivere was thus shamed, and going to the water, he took the sword, and threw it in as far as he could; and there came a hand and arm above the water, and met it, and caught it, and so, shaking it thrice, vanished away with the sword into the water. Then arose on the waters, a boat with three ladies in black robes, who lifted King Arthur into their boat, all wounded as he was, and so it pushed off from the water's edge, and was L quickly lost to sight; even while Sir Bedivere was returning back to the place where he had left the King. When he saw that the King was gone, he stood dismayed for some little space, and Sir Thomas, who had seen all, came up, and climbing up to his side, began to speak. Ha! cried he, little pigmy, whence comest thou? What has chanced? asked the knight. How befell this woful fight? I left all in peace but seven days since. Seven days! It is seven years since thou didst vanish. Where hast thou been? 55 In Fairy-knd, replied Sir Thomas, and he told his tale. Ha! said Sir Bedivere, some there were who would have it that thou hadst gone over to Sir Mordred; but when the King saw thy sword lying unsheathed where thou wast wont to keep watch, he said that thou hadst met with some foul play, and he and Queen Guenever made...
