In reality, success means different things to different people. Everyone desires success in what they do. There is hardly anybody that is satisfied at an existing level of life; no matter the accomplishment. Success can be described as the courage to let out the existing dreams and potentials inside self and giving them a space to spring out. Most people are scared of venturing into what is not a routine, but those that have tried it realize it is a normal track of life. The ancient Greeks had two famous sayings: Man, know thyself and Moderation in all things. Taken together, those two ideas are a good starting point for achieving the balance that you desire. With regard to knowing thyself, it is very important to give some serious thought to what you really value in life. All trade-offs and choices are based on your values, and all stress and unhappiness come from believing and valuing one thing and, yet, finding yourself doing another. Only when your values and your activities are congruent do you feel happy and at peace with yourself- from Brian Tracy s e-book, Principles of Success. In the business world, success is more achieved through hard work and determination than the quest for advantage and favouritism. In a physical combat, competition works; mental success requires originality and persistence, and political success means being able to comply with what will lead to victory at a given time. Once goals are set, success is determined by the right route that reduces time to fulfilment. Life question papers are different for each person, cheating leads to failure because the answers are so different from your own. That longing...
