John Wanamaker on Quayism and Boss Domination in Pennsylvania Politics The sole objects of this compact were to correct legislative abuses; to oppose legislative corruption; to protect Pennsylvania's educational and business interests, and to compel the wise and honest expenditure of the State's money. Any legislator who would stand for these principles was eligible for membership, whether a Republican or a Democrat. Of the original Seventy-six members all stood firm throughout the session, save five, who proved too weak to withstand the subduing and debauching process of the machine. Yet the membership was more than kept good by recruits from the machine's ranks, who refused to be driven into a betrayal of their constituent's interests to pay the political debts of the machine.
