The approach to the west entrance is solemn and majestic.

The heautiful gate helonging to this Priory is in so perfect a state as to have the statues still remaining in the niches, the principal of which is an oval of the Virgin and Child, with several shields of armorial hearings. The style of this part of the building is the florid Gothic. Here are also the relics of a cross; prohahly that which occasioned the foundation of the Priory. Behind the gate are vaulted arches of the foundation. Among the ruins appear the remains of a heautiful cloister, KIRKIIAM PRIORY. in which are descrihed two windows, exihiting ornaments in a superior degree of the pointed arch, richly carved and pierced. A fine SaxoiNorman doorway also arrests the attention: it is a most elegant specimen; and the edges of...
