Eugene, who was followed by the whole company, asked, without the least embarrassment, where he was to place his money. If you put one louts on any of these thirty-six numbers and it comes up, you will win thirty-six louis said a respectable-looking old man with white hair. Eugene placed the whole hundred francs on the number of his own age, --twenty-one. A cry of astonishment broke from every one before he knew himself what had happened. He had won. Take up your money, said the old gentleman; people do not win twice in that way. Eugene took a rake which the speaker handed to him, and drew in three thousand six hundred francs. Once more, knowing nothing of the game, he placed his money on the red. The bystanders looked at him with envy, seeing that he played on. The wheel turned, --he won...
