All connected with the titled family of Parham. There is a tradition, however, preserved in the family on this side of the Atlantic. That one of their race was a kinswoman and maid of honor to Queen Elizabeth. In the Nugze Antiquize, may be seen some laudatory verses to the six gentlewomen attending the Princess Elizabeth at Hatfield House, during the reign of her sister Mary (1553 and whose names are given as Grey, illoughby, Markham. Norwich. St. Loo and Skipwith. The latter was Bridget, daughter of Sir villiam Skipwith (sheriff of Lincoln, Miss St. Loo was probably connected with Sir William Saintlow, one of the Princess s household; while Isabella Markham became the second wife of the enraptured poem There existed at this time a family of vwilloughbys in Nottinghamshire, of some importance, and entirely distinct from the...
