Excerpt: . . . within, by the hope which looks for Him unto salvation, and by the assurance of the eternal inheritance awaiting him; the contemplation of this will protect him from many of earths distractions, and from the desire to build on any branch of the forest condemned to death. How is it preserved By dwelling in the secret of His presence. How often is that place of safety assailed The curiosity of the natural man must be restrained, and thus the idle questioning of things and people, which can have no value to one whose aim is to win Christ. How soon is the sensitiveness to the Holy Spirits influence obscured, when the mind receives and ponders on worldly pleasures and maxims and its selfish policy, and the aimless talk of those who know nothing of the divine life; such things fail not to cast a shadow on our communion with the Holy One. How carefully the oculist guards his own eyesight from injury; how studious is the surgeon to preserve the delicacy of his hand; how carefully the vocalist protects his voice! Yet how careless are Christians in their intercourse with the world and with each other, regardless of the ambush from which the enemy waits to shoot at the upright in heart. So the temple becomes defiled by unconscious (if not conscious) uncleanness, and we forget to trace back to the influence of some unwatchful hour the shadow on the soul, the foot out...
