Under electric lighting, the tungsten, watt and watt carbon, and the nernst lamps will be taken up, for gas lighting, the inverted and upright mantle and the old open flame Lamp s will be discussed. For acetylene lighting the 5 foot open flame burner, which is used mostly in residence work, and for gasoline lighting, the two systems, the hollow wire and stove generating systems will be treated. For petroleum lamps, the ordinary wick.lamp and the recent mantle burners will be considered. Some other forms of lamps, as the alcohol mantle lamp and other forms may at times be mentioned. In comparing the cost of illuminants, a strictly dollars and cents comparison is not sufficient, and would not be fair to all forms of lamps. Some lamps while cheaper in actual cost of production, are much more expensive, all other things considered. In order to make an impartial comparison of all light sources, they should be compared in somewhat the following manner.
