

Theres No Crying in Prison: Battling the Dark Side of Human Nature

By Jack Jaffe

Createspace. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 165 pages. Other than crime dramas or primetime specials on television, most individuals will never see inside the walls of a correctional institution. As the chief of psychology in the federal prison system, Dr. Jack Jaffe has experienced the people and the culture of prisons first hand. In Theres No Crying in Prison: Battling the Dark Side of Human Nature he introduces criminal justice students and those interested in criminology to the secluded world of prisons. Jaffe shares his observations working on the front lines with inmates in order to give readers a real-life glimpse into a prison. He wants readers to understand the people and the culture, so he relies on his personal experiences to convey this message. Jaffe describes the physical, social and cultural world of inmates and how they try to influence their surrounding environment. On the other side of the bars, he explains the strategies staff members use to contain the inmates. The author hopes that through his book, readers will get a greater understanding of prisons. He attempts to show them as challenging and interesting places, rather than the popular depiction of a bunch of...
