C : National Aeronautics and Space Administration, 1989 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)57988814 Excerpt: . . . ANALYSES Repeated-measures experimental designs provide statistical power by reducing the proportion of error to true score through within-subject replications. Test theory ( Allen and Yen, 1979 ) assumes that if practice, mood, apparatus, etc. , or other systematic influences are absent from the error portion of the obtained score one may better estimate true score. Therefore, we examine our data for anomalies prior to formal analyses. This process is accomplished by examining data from four to five subjects at a time. Using the measures of number correct, percent correct, and average response latency, the data are plotted over trials for each subject for each test. The graphic presentation of the three measures provides for efficient inspection of all the scores. Data anomalies are then visually identified for appropriate action. The five criteria suggested by Turnage, Kennedy, and Osteen ( 1987 ) were followed: ( 1 ) if the subjects mean percent correct score is less than 60 on a two-choice ( true false ) test, drop the subject for that particular test; ( 2 ) if the subject completes less than 75 of a series of test trials, drop the subject from that particular series; otherwise, retain the completed test trials; ( 3 ) if the subject does not respond after more than the beginning three trials, drop the subject for that session; ( 4 ) if the subject responds appropriately and systematically for all but one trial of a test, substitute a value for that trial ( as the anomaly is probably a hardware or software malfunction ); ( 5 ) if a subject has a...
