Excerpt from Huguenot Society of America Constitution, by Laws: As Revised January 7, 1901 The emigration of the Huguenots in the seventeenth century is one of the most important events of modern history. It largely prepared the way, a century later, for the overthrow of the old regime in France; it greatly enriched, morally, intellectually and materially, every country in which the exiles took refuge; and it is the true source of the liberal character which has since marked the public polity of Europe. Besides this general significance, the Huguenot emigration possessed two features which distinguished it from all similar events known in history, and which render its careful study and commemoration eminently proper and instructive. The Huguenots, in the first place, did not, like so many common adventurers, leave their country to seek fortune abroad. It was with them a question of mass or exile; and nearly a million of men, women and children, comprising the best elements of the population of France, forsook their country at the call of conscience, in order to enjoy under more liberal rulers...
