Paperback. Condition: New. 292 pages. From the dialogues with Kirandonakis my mentor, Q Why am I here, whats the meaning of me being here as a human being, and who made us A You and I, and all other human beings, and every living thing are here by accident; no one made us. Be a good man because you want to; not because someone puts the fear of god in you, or someone orders you toWest of the Parthenon, by the sea of Keratsini, and by the mountains to the north, is where I saw the first light upon coming in this world. On a February morning in 1948, breakfast was my only incentive to go to school. Greece was recovering from the German occupation and civil war. As I neared the school, I could almost taste the hot cocoa. Because it was extremely cold, and I didnt have enough clothing, my mother made three holes in a pillowcase and put it over me to keep me warm. The pillowcase was too large for my little body, and I must have looked like a hermit crab. Above my teachers desk hung the Greek flag in all its glory. I climbed on the desk, grabbed it, and with missionary zeal, tore it in pieces, and cleaned all the windows to perfection. I put all the used pieces in the wastebasket. When Miss Kukidu returned, her eyes fell on the windows, then at the basket, and her face was stricken with horror. I tried to engage her in conversation while waiting for the sunrise, but she put her finger on her mouth, indicating she didnt want to talk. I respected her wish and didnt say a word. The author was born in Greece, completed his early education there, traveled around the world...
