Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The McGilliad, Vol. 2: December 1930 For some weeks rumours have been current that this year it was at last the turn of America to receive the prize for literature, America s best luck previously having been with the prize for peace. It is known that the claims of various American writers were being deftly put before the members of the Swedish Academy. It is said that a group of lobbyists was especially active in the interest of Mr. Paul More, the Humanist. Then rumour had it that the competition had settled down to Theodore Dreiser and Sinclair Lewis. At last, the choice of Lewis was announced to the public. One thing, at any rate, can be said in justification of the selection of Sinclair Lewis. He is not an unknown man. On the contrary, he is one of the most widely read of living writers. As Walter Lippman pointed out some years ago, he seems to have begun with writing novels to please the public that nobody wanted to read, and to have shifted to writing novels to please himself that everybody wanted to read. The publication of Main Street in 1920 made his name a familiar one throughout the United States. Two years later, the success of Babbitt brought him a large English public and since then he has become one of the three or four best known American writers on the continent of Europe. Mr. Lewis is undoubtedly a man to be reckoned with. The Nation a few weeks ago ventured to prophesy that Arrowsmith would be read when Lewis s other books are read no longer. One may class this with that other famous prophecy that...
