Many know what it is to be saved, to become a Christian, but living a saved or Christian life can be quite another matter, especially when things don't turn out as we expect them to be. In this book the writer takes us through the book of James, a book addressed to a people who had retreated and cooled off in their faith because of varying temptations and trials - things hadn't turned out as they had expected. This is no book of straw as Martin Luther the Reformer claimed but a book with a vital and powerful message for all God's people down through the centuries and needed as much today - it is a message of steel. Covering a range of human experience - trials and temptations, partiality, faith and works, the tongue, anger and more - James turns out to be a lovingly challenging book that gets under our skin and roots out the problem and drives us to the answer.
