Excerpt from The False and True in Reforms and Reformers: An Address Delivered Before the Amphisbeteon Literary Society, of Eldersridge Academy, October 1st, 1850 This sort of false change and Reform makes itself visible frequently in young legislators. Certainly it does in those wishing the good opinion of their fellow men, in anticipation of some legislative day yet to come. A long time ago the wisest and the best were the lawmakers of kingdoms and republics. The work was one at which experience and ability toiled, and found it no children's frolic. It was a labor when the arm of the stripling was too weak to be a helper. But now, in this fast age, this age when shows and phantasms and desert mirages are leading men away on all sides, the legislator whose hobby is change, may get on well enough, faster and further than his betters. There is a show of wisdom about him. He is not satisfied, at all events, with things as they are. He would do something to hasten on the good time that is to come...
